

I was displeased to learn that FCC is considering revising laws that prohibit a company from owning both a newspaper and a tv station. The media is already too consolidated as a result of the Telecommunications Act of 1996.

The move to abandon these laws will result in a lack of viewpoints, the newspaper and tv industry will be absorbed into one huge media monopoly, and a lack of news coverage as newspapers will turn to tv for most of the reporting.

I respectfully request that FCC does not remove the last shred of regulation on the media industry.
